"There is a great difference between arts and civil affairs; arts and sciences should be like mines, resounding on all sides with new works, and further progress; but it is not good to try experiments in States, except the necessity be urgent or the utility evident; and well to beware that it is the reformation that draweth on the change, and not the desire of change that pretendeth the reformation."—Bacon.

OLD LETTERS:

BEING OCCASIONAL EXTRACTS FROM THE CORRESPONDENCE OF A STUDENT IN GERMANY.

BY PROFESSOR EDW. S. JOYNE.

NOTE.—These letters, never intended for the public eye, have long lain among other bundles of old papers, more or less valueless, in the writer's desk; and do not claim to be more now, when this unexpectedly resurrected, in the humble volunteer contribution to the Literature of the Southern Press. The greater part of the series of which, but a few have been accidentally preserved, are probably long since lost and forgotten by those to whom they were addressed.

DOWN the fine southern slope of the hill upon which Cassel (I should rather say the newest and handsomest part of it,) is situated, passing through the most beautiful walks and carriage roads, between rows of grand old trees, which white their branches above, and through gardens and plateaus tastefully laid out and beautifully adorned, which make the hill-side a blended panorama of nature and art, you descend into a broad and level meadow, the "Aue Garten" (meadow garden), the public pleasure ground of Cassel. Around it the carriage roads, and through it in every direction numerous footpaths, lead into thick woods, or to shady retreats around little lakes, where the waters from the moor-tains are artificially collected. There are but evidences enough of the hand of man, to give order and beauty to nature, and a morning walk before breakfast through the rich green meadow, and thence into the woods around these shady lakes, and back along the hill-side above into the town, brings cheerful and a healthy atmosphere.
